

Science Communication Course Description

In this course, participants will obtain the foundational skills required for effective scientific communications. Participants will review scientific information presented in professional and popular media. Participants will also develop a scientific communication proposal that will include describing the significance ability to communicate will be evaluated using a variety of formats as they present information. In addition to learning effective communication, trainees will learn to evaluate the quality of science presentation available across various media from popular media (news, magazines) to professional sources (scientific journals). The course will cover scientific writing styles, grammar, different types of research and scientific literature, presentation of graphical information via figures and charts.